

Acknowledgments

This book evolved like the process it describes. With clear focus I began with a plan, a discussion, and then a new plan, and on it went. I'm a believer in team and process . . . and I trust the dance.

What a truly marvelous, talented team supported this project. Direct, honest communication, putting ideas on the table, starting again . . . I feel very honored to have this support.

The ideas and story have accumulated over thirty years with so many wonderful, cherished people who have influenced my life and development.

A dear friend, SuperCamp parent, and supporter, DeeDee DeMan Williams, introduced me to someone she knew had the experience, talent, and vision to further ours. Sue Baechler “got” our vision—saw it, knew it, believed in it—and jumped in and has been supporting our direction to get what she believes is an important message out to the world.

Sue, in turn, introduced us to others. I'm honored to have the support of Ken Atchity, who I would best describe as director. He teaches through his directness, seeing what needs to happen and sharing his expertise. And Ken brought on others . . .

I'm very grateful for Julie Mooney's experienced and flowing writer's mind, and the patience and project supervision of Andrea McKeown of The Writer's Lifeline.

Clint Greenleaf was brought in to produce the book package and help us get it in your hands. It was a fitting, fun surprise when Clint and I remembered each other from the '80s—another successful SuperCamp graduate. I appreciate the caring work from Clint and his team at Greenleaf Book Group, in particular our project leader Lari Bishop.